ABSTRACT

Dissertations (301) completed by graduate students majoring in extension and adult education at Cornell University are listed in this document by year completed. They are indexed under nine general topics: administrative organization and management; comparative extension and adult education; Communication methods; effectiveness and progress of programs; leadership; organization and participation in programs; program content and planning procedures; staff development and training; and miscellaneous topics. Because the content of much of the research has relevance to topics other than its major subject, much overlapping exists in the classification. (PT)

FOREWORD

Cornell University for more than 40 years has provided opportunity and encouragement to cooperative extension personnel and other adult educators to improve their professional competency. This concern was formalized in the Cornell Graduate School in 1948 by the pioneering establishment of a full-fledged graduate study curriculum leading to both the Master of Science and Doctor of Philosophy Degrees with specialization in Extension and Adult Education.

Since the beginning of this new opportunity for advanced study at Cornell, more than 400 administrators, supervisors and specialists in extension, community development and other adult education endeavors have enrolled in the Graduate School for study in this field of specialization. More than 300 of them completed all requirements, including a dissertation, and were awarded a graduate degree -- 82 have earned the Doctorate and 219 the Master's Degree.

These scholars came from nearly every state in the United States and from more than 40 countries abroad. They have been continuously employed in leadership positions in colleges, universities, government ministries, extension and community development systems and other continuing education agencies. The dissertations completed by these Cornell Extension and Adult Education Alumni are listed here and are catalogued in the Cornell University Libraries.

We have prepared this list of researches in the hope that it may extend the availability of this extensive body of scientific literature. Interested persons may use copies of the dissertations in the Mann or Olin Libraries at Cornell University. Microfilm copies of doctoral dissertations from 1954 to date may be purchased for a small charge from University Microfilms, Ann Arbor, Michigan. Limited information may be found in Dissertation Abstracts, available in most university and college libraries. Loan of other theses may be requested, or microfilm copies purchased by addressing Cornell University Libraries, Inter-Library Service, Cornell University, Ithaca, New York.

INDEX

The 301 dissertations included in this listing are indexed for the user's convenience under nine general topics. But because the content in many of the researches has relevance to topics other than its major subject, much overlapping exists in the classification. Consequently, readers should depend primarily on the title of the dissertation in selecting material of interest to them.

Cornell University Library catalogue numbers are stated in parentheses following the title of each dissertation in the listing. The symbols associated with some index numbers in the classification indicate:
